Prior to 2014, Glock had not released a new pistol design since the beginning of the century. There were a few old Glock designs rechambered for new calibers, and we got the updated Gen 4 Glock, but the last pistol the Austrian company produced that could truly be considered a new design was the single stack .45 ACP Glock 36, which became available in 2000.

Glock 42 Review - A Deep Look at the .380 ACP Pistol

Glock handguns from the very start were designed as standard-sized double-stack pistols, with the Austrian military's P80 9mm pistol going on to become the Glock 17 in the early 1980s. Even dropping down to the "compact" Glock 19, it was still a large gun, standing 5-inches high with a 15+1 round capacity, 30-ounce loaded weight, and a 4-inch barrel.

In-Depth Review: Glock 43 9mm Slimline Subcompact Carry Gun

The best Glock 9mm models for concealed carry are Glock 19, 26, 43, and 48 which were all designed for this purpose. If you're looking to carry your Glock openly, there is a wider choice of models that will be suitable. You can opt for a larger pistol with a higher magazine capacity meaning fewer reloads will be needed.
