In the Wake of Columbus: The Impact of the New World on ...

On October 12, 1492, the landfall of Columbus may well have unleashed the greatest destruction of human lives in history. The toll exacted on Indigenous peoples across the Americas was catastrophic. Abuse and mistreatment notwithstanding, massive depopulation in the wake of Columbus was primarily a consequence of vulnerability to infections against which Amerindians had no immunity.

From my viewpoint, the expedition was a success in several ways. Josiah was delighted to follow in his theoretical wake of Columbus and felt more confident that his Grand Turk first-landfall theory was correct. I learned volumes about Columbus and the waters and islands he visited upon arriving in the Caribbean.
