The traditional functional concept of transpeninsular routes is discussed in E. G. Bowen's 1969 book Saints Seaways and Settlements.² Bowen drew on the earlier work of archaeologists such as Cyril Fox, Lily Chitty, Glyn Daniel, and O. G. S. Crawford.³ They theorised that the distribution patterns of prehistoric artefacts such as pottery, bronze axes and monuments throughout northwest Europe suggested that people used a network of well-travelled sea routes.

Winwaloe was the son of Fragan (or Fracan), a prince of Dumnonia, and his wife Gwen the Three-Breasted, who had fled to Brittany to avoid the plague.. Winwaloe was born about 460, apparently at Plouguin, near Saint-Pabu, [citation needed] where his supposed place of birth, a feudal hillock, can still be seen. Winwaloe grew up in Ploufragan near Saint-Brieuc with his brother Wethenoc, and his ...

Christianity in Cornwall began in the 4th or 5th century AD when Western Christianity was introduced into Cornwall along with the rest of Roman Britain. Over time it became the official religion, superseding previous Celtic and Roman practices. Early Christianity in Cornwall was spread largely by the saints, including Saint Piran, the patron of the county.

Saint Brynach died on 7 April, on which day his feast is celebrated. His church, beside the River Nevern, is his lasting memorial. The "Life of St Brynach" portrays him as something of a wild fellow in his youth but very virtuous after his conversion. The descriptions of his adventures (including amorous and ghostly encounters) display a degree ...
